

From a request to a clear decision.

When someone asks to help an account holder through a power of attorney, your team needs the right information and a clear record. Passage brings the request, review and decision into one place.

01	Prepare the request	Name the people, the account relationship and what help is requested.
02	Collect the information	The account holder and representative each complete their own steps.
03	Review and decide	Your team reviews the files, asks questions and records its decision.
04	Share the decision	Each person can view a matching receipt with the accepted actions and limits.

Start with a small, fictional example

The current New York evaluation covers two requests: getting copies of statements and discussing service issues. It uses fictional people and sample documents. Any pilot with customer data needs a separate review and approval.

Your institution stays in charge.

Your team makes the legal, identity, fraud and account-access decisions. Passage records the process and outcome; your institution makes any account changes in its own systems.

Where do these requests get stuck in your team?
